About

Jeremy Bowen is a journalist with a vast knowledge and experience of the Middle East. From 1995-2000, he was based in Jerusalem as the BBC's Middle East Correspondent, winning awards from television festivals in New York and Monte Carlo, as well as a Best Breaking News report from the Royal Television Society on the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin.

During the Kosovo crisis of 1999, he reported extensively from the region, often in dangerous conditions, which included being robbed at gunpoint by bandits whilst reporting from the Albanian border. Since June 2005 he has been working in the newly-created role of BBC Middle East Editor.

Jeremy presented the brilliant BBC 1 documentary, On the Front Line, which graphically portrayed what life is really like for journalists working under fire. He is highly respected within his profession and in the wider public sphere.

Testimonials

Jeremy Bowen's talk was very well received, with positive feedback only! He talked for about 30 minutes about how his experiences, motivating film crews in difficult situations in the Middle East, related to the managers' own roles in terms of motivating their own teams. The audience found him fascinating and inspirational and the 30 minute Q&A session following his talk could have gone on a lot longer as there was so much positive response to Jeremy's speech. After the talk, Jeremy was wonderful at mingling with delegates and everyone there found the entire experience of meeting him to be inspirational, motivational and uplifting.
