About

Simon May is best-known as the composer of the EastEnders theme tune as well as Howard's Way, Castaway, Pet Rescue, Holiday Programme, City Hospital and many other themes which are familiar to British TV viewers. He is also very popular on the corporate team building, motivational and after dinner speaking circuit.

EastEnders was nominated but failed to win the coveted Ivor Novello award for best TV theme of the year in 1985. However a year later Simon used that disappointment to write and produce a song for Nick Berry which was featured on EastEnders and achieved the No.1 position in the UK charts. 'Every Loser Wins' sold over a million copies and received the Ivor Novello award for best selling single of 1986. Turning failure into success is an important part of Simon May's credo.

Writing the theme for Eldorado and heading a commercially unsuccessful national tour with the Simon May Orchestra provide a humorous but realistic insight into the highs and lows of a dangerous profession. The lessons learnt have many parallels between managing and conducting an Orchestra and the skills of corporate thinking and management.
